Selected legal principles pertinent to appointment of counsel..... 43

I. Certain decisions are the defendant’s and certain decisions are defense counsel’s.¹

A. Defendant’s decisions after full consultation.

1. What plea to enter.
2. Whether to waive a jury trial.
3. Whether to testify in his or her own behalf.

See ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, § 4-5.2(a), at 199-200 (ABA 3d ed. 1993) [hereinafter cited as “ABA Standards”]; Annotated Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.2(a) (ABA 5th ed. 2003) [hereinafter cited as “AMRPC”]; Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.02(a) [hereinafter cited as “TDRPC”]; see also Florida v. Nixon, 543 U.S. 175, 187-92 (2004) (reiterating that “[a] defendant . . . has ‘the ultimate authority’ to determine ‘whether to plead guilty, waive a jury, testify in his or her own behalf, or take an appeal,’” but that, when counsel informs the defendant of the strategic choice to admit guilt in the guilt-innocence phase of a capital trial and the client is unresponsive, prejudice is not to be presumed in an analysis for ineffective assistance of counsel); United States v. Thomas, 417 F.3d 1053, 1056-59 (9th Cir. 2005) (applying Nixon to a non-capital federal prosecution and assuming that it is deficient performance to fail to consult with the defendant prior to conceding guilt, but holding that there was no prejudice under the test for ineffective assistance of counsel); United States v. Mullins, 315 F.3d 449, 454-57 (5th Cir. 2002) (holding that the “decision of whether to testify belongs to the defendant and his lawyer cannot waive it over his objection,” but that the lawyer’s improper deprivation of the right to testify, although deficient performance, was not prejudicial in this particular case); United

States v. Holman, 314 F.3d 837, 840-45 (7th Cir. 2002) (holding that performance of attorney who conceded client's guilt without client's consent from the beginning of trial on one of many counts of drug trafficking was constitutionally deficient, but that the defendant suffered no prejudice as a result), cert. denied, 538 U.S. 1058 (2003); Sexton v. French, 163 F.3d 874, 881 (4th Cir. 1998) (noting that every circuit to have addressed the matter has found that the decision of whether to testify is personal and must be waived by the defendant), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 855 (1999); United States v. Ortiz, 82 F.3d 1066 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (holding that a per se rule requiring court to inquire whether defendant knowingly and intelligently was waiving his right to testify would interfere with the attorney-client relationship, but that, if the court is alerted to a problem with the attorney-client relationship, court may have duty to ask defendant whether waiver was voluntary); United States v. Pennycooke, 65 F.3d 9 (3d Cir. 1995) (court ordinarily should not inform defendant of right to testify or ask defendant whether he is waiving the right voluntarily, because this could influence defendant to waive right not to testify); Nielsen v. Hopkins, 58 F.3d 1331 (8th Cir. 1995) (counsel's having psychiatrist testify at guilt-innocence phase of murder trial that defendant was intoxicated at the time of the killing did not amount to conceding guilt, because intoxication was a defense to first-degree murder); Nichols v. Butler, 953 F.2d 1550 (11th Cir. 1992) (defendant was denied effective assistance of counsel where attorney, for purely strategic (non-perjury-related) reasons, threatened to withdraw if defendant testified); United States v. Teague, 953 F.2d 1525, 1532 (11th Cir.) (right to testify is personal and fundamental and cannot be waived by counsel or the court), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 842 (1992); Stano v. Dugger, 921 F.2d 1125, 1146 (11th Cir.) (even if counsel is retained, defendant does not relinquish decision on what plea to enter), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 835 (1991); Miller v. Angliker, 848 F.2d 1312 (2d Cir.) (defendant's choice to plead guilty, not guilty, or not guilty by reason of insanity), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 890 (1988); Francis v. Spraggins, 720 F.2d 1190 (11th Cir. 1983) (trial counsel cannot concede guilt at guilt-innocence phase of capital murder trial), cert. denied, 470 U.S. 1059 (1985); Wiley v. Sowders, 647 F.2d 642 (6th Cir.) (counsel cannot concede guilt without obtaining consent to strategy), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1091 (1981); see generally Godinez v. Moran, 509 U.S. 389 (1993) (in context of competency standard, court mentions several decisions defendant must be able to make: whether to waive jury trial, whether to testify, what defense to use).

4. Whether to appeal. See ABA Standards § 4-8.2(a), (b), at 237; see also Roe v. Flores-Ortega, 528 U.S. 470, 477 (2000) (reiterating that it is professionally unreasonable for a lawyer to disregard a client’s direction to file a notice of appeal); Don v. Nix, 886 F.2d 203 (8th Cir. 1989) (counsel cannot waive defendant’s right to appeal).
 - a. Indeed, disregarding the client’s direction to file a notice of appeal is professionally unreasonable even “in a case where the defendant signed, as part of his plea agreement, a limited waiver of his right to appeal his sentence.” Gomez-Diaz v. United States, 433 F.3d 788, 790, 791-93 (11th Cir. 2005); see also United States v. Poindexter, 492 F.3d 263, 271-73 (4th Cir. 2007); United States v. Tapp, 491 F.3d 263, 265-66 (5th Cir. 2007); Campusano v. United States, 442 F.3d 770, 771-72 (2d Cir. 2006); United States v. Garrett, 402 F.3d 1262, 1266-67 (10th Cir. 2005); But see Nunez v. United States, 495 F.3d 544, (7th Cir. 2007) (expressing doubt and disagreeing with the circuits that hold that a lawyer has a duty to file a notice of appeal even when the client has waived the right to appeal, but ultimately deciding the ineffective assistance of counsel claim on the ground that the client waived collateral attack), petition for cert. filed, 76 U.S.L.W. 3349 (U.S. Dec. 18, 2007) (No. 07-818).
 - b. This is true “regardless of whether [the defendant] can identify any arguably meritorious grounds for appeal that would fit one of the exceptions contained in his appeal waiver.” Gomez-

Diaz, 433 F.3d at 793; see also Campusano, 442 F.3d at 773-75; Garrett, 402 F.3d at 1267.

- c. Thus, when a defendant who has waived certain appellate rights as part of a plea agreement requests that defense counsel file a notice of appeal, counsel should file the notice of appeal and should subsequently brief the validity of the waiver of appellate rights and file a brief pursuant to Anders v. California, 386 U.S. 738 (1967), when there is no basis to contest the validity of the waiver. See United States v. Gomez-Perez, 215 F.3d 315, 319-20 (2d Cir. 2000); see also Gomez-Diaz, 433 F.3d at 793 (defendant entitled to out-of-time appeal if he requested that defense counsel file notice of appeal, even where he waived certain appellate rights); Garrett, 402 F.3d at 1267 (same); cf. United States v. Story, 439 F.3d 226, 230 (5th Cir. 2006) (holding that appeal waivers do not deprive the appellate court of jurisdiction).
 - d. One court has held that counsel's failure to remain reasonably available during the ten-day window for filing a notice of appeal constituted ineffective assistance of counsel. See Corral v. United States, 498 F.3d 470, 473-75 (7th Cir. 2007). But see Otero v. United States, 499 F.3d 1267, 1271 (11th Cir. 2007) (holding that counsel had no constitutional obligation to consult with client about whether to appeal where the client had agreed to a broad waiver of appeal and did not communicate to counsel a desire to appeal); but see also United States v. Parsons, 505 F.3d 797, 799-800 (8th Cir. 2007) (holding that where counsel did not hear defendant's request to appeal "the relevant inquiry is whether counsel's failure to consult about an appeal was ineffective assistance," and finding that it was not).
5. Whether to represent himself or herself. See Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806 (1975) (court cannot force defendant to accept appointed attorney); see also McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168 (1984) (right to self-representation not violated when standby counsel does not interfere with control of defense or appearance of self-representation); United States v. Wilkes, 20 F.3d 651 (5th Cir. 1994) (although pro se pleadings are construed liberally, pro se litigants must still comply with Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure); In re Hipp, Inc., 5 F.3d 109, 114 (5th Cir. 1993) (request to proceed pro se must be clear and unequivocal); but see Martinez v. Court of Appeals of California, 528 U.S. 152, 163 (2000) (holding that a defendant does not have a Faretta-type constitutional right to represent self on appeal, as opposed to at trial).

6. The objective and general methods of representation. AMRPC, Rule 1.2(a) & Comment; TDRPC, Rule 1.02(a)(1); see, e.g., Nixon, 543 U.S. at 187 (reiterating that counsel is required to consult with the defendant on “‘important decisions,’ including questions of overarching defense strategy”); United States v. Felix-Rodriguez, 22 F.3d 964 (9th Cir. 1994) (counsel could not waive defendant’s right to be present when taped conversations were replayed to jury during deliberations); Carter v. Sowders, 5 F.3d 975 (6th Cir. 1993) (counsel could not waive defendant’s confrontation rights without defendant’s consent; granting habeas due to admission at trial of videotaped deposition of informant that defendant did not attend and that counsel left midway through), cert. denied, 511 U.S. 1097 (1994); Larson v. Tansy, 911 F.2d 392 (10th Cir. 1990) (counsel could not waive defendant’s right to be present during trial; defendant’s silence when counsel made request did not constitute waiver).

B. Strategic decisions to be made by lawyer after full consultation.

1. Which witnesses to call.
2. Whether and how to conduct cross-examination.
3. Which jurors to accept or strike. See, e.g., United States v. Boyd, 86 F.3d 719 (7th Cir. 1996) (defendant did not have right to determine how to use peremptory challenges).

4. What trial motions to make.
5. All other strategic or tactical decisions. See ABA Standards, § 4-5.2(b), at 200; AMRPC, Rule 1.2(a) & Comment; TDRPC, Rule 1.02, Comment 1 (a lawyer has very broad discretion to determine technical and legal tactics, subject to certain wishes of the client regarding expenses and concern for third parties who might be adversely affected); see also Gonzalez v. United States, No. 06-11612, 2008 WL 2001954, at *5 (U.S. May 12, 2008) (holding that “acceptance of a magistrate judge at the jury selection phase is a tactical decision” and, therefore, that “express consent by counsel suffices to permit a magistrate judge to preside over jury selection in a felony trial, pursuant to the authorization in [28 U.S.C.] § 636(b)(3)”); Nixon, 543 U.S. at 187-92 (holding that, although counsel has a duty to consult with the defendant on questions of overarching defense strategy, when the client is unresponsive during consultation, counsel may proceed without obtaining explicit consent of the client); Darden v. Wainwright, 477 U.S. 168 (1986) (not ineffective assistance of counsel to introduce no mitigating evidence at penalty phase because government’s rebuttal evidence would have been damaging); Haynes v. Cain, 298 F.3d 375 (5th Cir.) (en banc) (holding that defense counsel’s concession that defendant was guilty of second-degree murder was a strategic attempt to avoid the death penalty rather than a failure to subject the prosecution’s case to meaningful adversarial testing, that it thus did not raise presumption of prejudice, and that the failure to obtain the defendant’s consent before making this concession did not prejudice defendant under Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984)), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 1072 (2002); Sexton, 163 F.3d at 885 (stating that some decisions are personal and cannot be made without the client’s consent, but that other decisions, such what evidence to introduce, what objections to make, and what pretrial motions to file, including a motion to suppress evidence, are tactical and can be made without the client’s consent); Government of Virgin Islands v. Weatherwax, 77 F.3d 1425 (3d Cir. 1996) (counsel did not have to follow client's request to bring it to court's attention that juror had been seen with newspaper account of trial); Brecheen v. Reynolds, 41 F.3d 1343, 1368-69 (10th Cir. 1994) (counsel must discuss mitigation strategy with capital murder defendant, but decision whether to present mitigating evidence is counsel's), cert. denied, 515 U.S. 1135 (1995); United States v. McGill, 11 F.3d 223 (1st Cir. 1993) (whether to make futile objection to admission of prejudicial film clip, or try to dilute its impact by having entire film shown, was counsel's decision); Drew v. Collins, 964 F.2d 411, 423 (5th Cir. 1992) (decision not to object to closing argument in capital murder prosecution was a matter of trial strategy and was not proof of ineffective assistance of counsel), cert. denied, 509 U.S. 925 (1993); Poole v. United States, 832 F.2d 561 (11th Cir. 1987) (stipulation to easily provable matters does not require defendant's consent), cert. denied, 488 U.S. 817 (1988); Graham v. Mabry, 645 F.2d 603 (8th Cir. 1981) (voir dire and challenges are well within function of trial counsel); United States v. Stephens, 609 F.2d 230 (5th Cir. 1980) (stipulation to evidence and waiver of right of confrontation acceptable if client does not dissent and decision is legitimate trial tactic or prudent trial strategy); cf. Rompilla v. Beard, 545 U.S. 374, 380-93 (2005) (holding that petitioner received ineffective assistance of counsel at his capital sentencing due to counsel's failure to investigate mitigating evidence regarding traumatic childhood and mental health problems when, if counsel only had reviewed the court file on petitioner's prior conviction, counsel would have found leads on mitigation); Lowery v. Collins, 996 F.2d 770 (5th Cir. 1993) (distinguishing defense counsel's failure to call a witness from the waiver in Stephens).

6. Counsel on appeal has no constitutional duty to raise every nonfrivolous issue requested by defendant. See Jones v. Barnes, 463 U.S. 745 (1983); see also Moss v. Collins, 963 F.2d 44 (5th Cir. 1992) (after filing an Anders brief, counsel need not send defendant record and inform him of opportunity to file a pro se brief, when there are no nonfrivolous issues), cert. denied, 506

U.S. 1055 (1993); Don v. Nix, 886 F.2d 203 (8th Cir. 1989) (which issues to raise on appeal is counsel's decision); Mayo v. Lynaugh, 882 F.2d 134 (5th Cir. 1989) (reasonable for appellate counsel to winnow out weaker arguments and focus on key issues); cf. United States v. Ogbanna, 184 F.3d 447, 449 & n.2 (5th Cir.) (refusing to consider the defendant's pro se brief, and threatening to sanction counsel for aiding the defendant in filing a frivolous pro se brief), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1055 (1999); United States v. Wagner, 158 F.3d 901 (5th Cir. 1998) (after counsel files Anders brief, court will consider Anders brief and defendant's arguments, but defendant cannot proceed pro se); United States v. Dierling, 131 F.3d 722, 734-35 n.7 (8th Cir. 1997) (stating that it is not the practice of the court to consider pro se briefs filed by parties who are represented by counsel, and implicitly rejecting the defendant's request for copies of the transcripts), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 1066 (1998).

7. Nor does appellate counsel have a duty to file a petition for rehearing. See United States v. Coney, 120 F.3d 26, 27 (3d Cir. 1997) (holding that criminal defense counsel is under no obligation to file a petition for rehearing or a petition for rehearing en banc); cf. United States v. Hawkins, 505 F.3d 613, 614-15 (7th Cir. 2007) (Ripple, J., in chambers) (acknowledging that defense counsel generally has no obligation to file a petition for rehearing, but noting that the court could not accept that position at the present time given the claim raised on appeal and the conclusory nature of appointed counsel's submission).
8. Appellate counsel also is not required to provide the defendant with his own personal copies of the transcripts. Kimsey v. Gora, 772 F.2d 907, 1985 WL 13651, at *2 (6th Cir. Aug. 1, 1985) (unpublished) (holding that a defendant represented by counsel on appeal is not entitled to his own personal copies of the transcripts in his case); United States v. Ward, 610 F.2d 294, 295 (5th Cir. 1980) (same); Hooks v. Roberts, 480 F.2d 1196, 1198 (5th Cir. 1973) (same), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 1163 (1974); Shelton v. Beto, 460 F.2d 1234, 1235 (5th Cir. 1972) (appellate counsel was the best judge of whether he needed a separate copy of the transcript); Perry v. Texas, 456 F.2d 879 (5th Cir.) (defendant has no right to copies of transcripts for his own personal use), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 916 (1972); cf. Wells v. United States, 530 F.2d 971, 1975 U.S. App. LEXIS 11778, at *2-*3 (4th Cir. 1975) (unpublished) (holding that there is no constitutional or statutory requirement that appellate counsel confer with his client).

II. Defense counsel cannot keep the fruits and instrumentalities of a crime.

- A. “It is an abuse of a lawyer’s professional responsibility knowingly to take possession of and secrete the fruits and instrumentalities of a crime.” In re Ryder, 381 F.2d 713, 714 (4th Cir. 1967); see also United States v. Cunningham, 672 F.2d 1064 (2d Cir. 1982) (disqualifying defense attorney who had allegedly fabricated and destroyed evidence); Glass v. Heyd, 457 F.2d 562, 566 (5th Cir. 1972) (adopting reasoning of In re Ryder).
1. Taking possession of the fruits and instrumentalities makes the lawyer a participant in the criminal act. In re Ryder, 381 F.2d at 714.
 2. The lawyer’s acts are not protected by the attorney-client privilege. Id.; see also Cal. Standing Comm. on Prof’l Responsibility, Formal Op. No. 1986-89, 1986 WL 69069, at *1-*2 (1986) (holding that, when client requests attorney to take possession of stolen property, attorney’s taking possession of such property would alter the state of its possession and location, and attorney must deliver stolen property to authorities if he takes possession of it and must inform the client that he will deliver the stolen property to authorities – and may become a witness – if he takes possession).
- B. An attorney cannot refuse to comply with a grand jury subpoena ordering him to turn over money received from clients suspected of a bank robbery. In re January 1976 Grand Jury, 534 F.2d 719 (7th Cir. 1976).

- C. A lawyer shall not assist or counsel client to engage in conduct that the lawyer knows is criminal or fraudulent. AMRPC, Rule 1.2(d); TDRPC, Rule 1.02(c). See, e.g., In re Mross, 657 N.W.2d 342 (Wis. 2003) (approving ninety-day suspension from the practice of law of state public defender who smuggled cigarettes to his incarcerated client).
1. Lawyer is required to give honest opinion about such conduct, but cannot participate. AMRPC, Rule 1.2, Comment; see also TDRPC, Rule 1.02(c).
 2. If client's conduct persists, withdrawal may be required. AMRPC, Rule 1.2, Comment.; see also TDRPC, Rule 1.02, Comment 8; id. Rule 1.15.
 3. Lawyer may reveal confidential information to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to prevent the client from committing a criminal act that the lawyer believes is likely to result in imminent death or substantial bodily injury. AMRPC, Rule 1.6 & Comment. Some jurisdictions, such as Texas, require the lawyer to reveal confidential information clearly establishing client is likely to commit a criminal or fraudulent act likely to result in death or serious bodily harm to a person, to the extent it reasonably appears necessary to prevent client from committing the act, and even permit the lawyer to reveal confidential information if substantial injury to financial interests or property is likely. See, e.g., TDRPC, Rule 1.05(e) & Comments 18 and 19.
- D. If you end up with the fruits or instrumentalities of the crime, immediately take remedial measures to produce them to the prosecution while maintaining the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine with regard to other information that you might have gathered.
1. See, e.g., United States v. Scruggs, 549 F.2d 1097, 1103-04 (6th Cir.) (affirming obstruction and possession of stolen money convictions of father and son attorneys who took bank robbery money as a fee, denied doing so, and destroyed the money), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 824 (1977);

2. Commonwealth v. Stenhach, 514 A.2d 114, 116-27 (Pa. Super. Ct. 1986) (affirming public defenders' convictions for hindering prosecution and tampering with evidence by withholding rifle stock until the middle of their client's murder trial), appeal denied, 534 A.2d 769 (Pa. 1987).

III. The attorney-client privilege does not protect conversations about on-going illegal activity.

- A. When the client seeks and obtains his attorney's advice in furtherance of illegal activities, the crime-fraud exception to the attorney-client privilege permits the introduction into evidence of those conversations. See United States v. Aucoin, 964 F.2d 1492 (5th Cir.) (intercepted conversations concerning on-going, illegal gambling activity held admissible), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 1023 (1992); see also TDRPC, Rule 1.05(c)(8) & Comments 9-12; United States v. Doe, 429 F.3d 450, 453-54 (3d Cir. 2005) (holding that the crime-fraud exception only applies "when a client knowingly seeks legal counsel to further a continuing or future crime" and does not apply when the client merely "proposes a course of conduct which he is advised by counsel is illegal").
- B. "Once the party seeking disclosure makes a prima facie case that the attorney-client relationship was used to promote an intended criminal activity, the confidences within the relationship are no longer shielded." United States v. Ballard, 779 F.2d 287, 292 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1109 (1986); see also In re: Grand Jury Investigation, 445 F.3d 266, 274 (3d Cir.) ("Therefore, the privilege can be overridden if the client used the lawyer's services to further a continuing or future crime or fraud."), cert. denied, 127 S. Ct. 538 (2006).
- C. A party "invoking the crime-fraud exception must make a prima facie showing that (1) the client was engaged in or planning a criminal or fraudulent scheme when he sought the advice of counsel to further the scheme, and (2) the documents containing the privileged materials bear a close relationship to the client's existing or future scheme to commit a crime or fraud." In re Grand Jury Proceedings # 5, 401 F.3d 247, 251

(4th Cir. 2005).

1. “Prong one of this test is satisfied by a prima facie showing of evidence that, if believed by a trier of fact, would establish the elements of some violation that was ongoing or about to be committed.” Id.
 2. “Prong two may be satisfied with a showing of a close relationship between the attorney-client communications and the possible criminal or fraudulent activity.” Id.; see also In re Green Grand Jury Subpoena, 492 F.3d 976, 983 (8th Cir. 2007) (rejecting the contention that the showing must be by clear and convincing evidence); In re: Grand Jury Investigation, 445 F.3d at 274 (holding that, in a criminal case, the government “must make a prima facie showing that (1) the client was committing or intending to commit a prima facie showing that a fraud or crime, and (2) the attorney-client communications were in furtherance of that alleged crime of fraud”); In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 419 F.3d 329, 336 (5th Cir. 2005) (noting that allegations in the pleadings alone are insufficient to make out a prima facie case).
- D. Whether the lawyer is unaware of or an unwitting tool in a continuing or planned wrongful act is irrelevant to the crime-fraud exception to the attorney-client privilege. In re Grand Jury Proceedings # 5, 401 F.3d at 251; see Doe, 429 F.3d at 454 (stating that “the client’s intention controls” and that the attorney-client “privilege may be denied even if the lawyer is altogether innocent”) (internal quotations omitted); In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 87 F.3d 377 (9th Cir. 1996) (focus is on client’s state of mind, not attorney’s; attorney may have been unaware of crime and taken no affirmative step to further it; crime need not be successfully completed); United States v. Neal, 27 F.3d 1035 (5th Cir. 1994) (crime-fraud exception applied even though attorney refused to participate in or assist with illegal scheme), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1179 (1995); see also TDRPC, Rule 1.05(c)(8) & Comments 9-12.
- E. The district court may perform an in camera inspection of privileged information if the government makes a prima facie showing that the crime-fraud exception applies. See United States v. Zolin, 491 U.S. 554, 572 (1989) (district court may perform in camera review of attorney-client material upon showing of factual basis for good faith belief that attorney was assisting client in crime or fraud); United States v. de la Jara, 973 F.2d 746 (9th Cir. 1992) (for court to perform in camera review of privileged materials, government must first make prima facie showing that crime-fraud exception applies, based on nonprivileged evidence).

- F. The circuits appear to be divided over whether a district court holding an in camera hearing must review allegedly privileged documents before deciding whether the crime-fraud exception applies. See In re Grand Jury Proceedings # 5, 401 F.3d at 253 & n.5 (holding that the district court could review summaries of the privilege holder's documents, but noting that In re BankAmerica Corp. Sec. Litig., 270 F.3d 639, 645 (8th Cir. 2001), and In re Antitrust Grand Jury, 805 F.2d 155, 168 (6th Cir. 1986), require a district court to review allegedly privileged documents in camera).
- G. However, a district court abuses its discretion when it is presented with no evidence of the contents of allegedly privileged documents, but nevertheless holds that the documents bear a close relationship to an existing or future scheme to commit a crime or fraud. In re Grand Jury Proceedings # 5, 401 F.3d at 255.
- H. Note that an innocent attorney may invoke the work product privilege "even if a prima facie case of fraud or criminal activity has been made as to the client." In re Grand Jury Proceedings, 43 F.3d 966, 972 (5th Cir. 1994).
- I. In fact, the Fourth Circuit, in a thorough analysis, has opined that the work product privilege may be asserted by the client or the attorney and that "those seeking to overcome the opinion work product privilege [as opposed to the fact work product privilege] must make a prima facie showing that the attorney in question was aware of or a knowing participant in the criminal conduct. If the attorney was not aware of the criminal conduct, a court must redact any portions of subpoenaed materials.” In re Grand Jury Proceedings # 5, 401 F.3d at 252 (emphasis added; internal quotation marks omitted); see also In re Green Grand Jury Subpoena, 492 F.3d at 976, 980-82 (8th Cir. 2007) (discussing the distinction between “ordinary work product” and “opinion work product” and the greater protection afforded the latter).

J. Even if the government makes a prima facie showing that the crime-fraud exception applies, “the proper reach of the crime-fraud exception when applicable does not extend to all communications made in the course of the attorney-client relationship, but rather is limited to those communications and documents in furtherance of the contemplated or ongoing criminal or fraudulent conduct.” In re Grand Jury Subpoena, 419 F.3d at 343 (holding that the district court’s “application of the crime-fraud exception was overly broad because it lacked the requisite specificity to reach only communications and documents no longer protected by the attorney-client and work product privileges”).

K. See also supra text, Section II.C.

IV. The attorney-client privilege protects conversations between an attorney and prospective clients who are jointly interviewed.

A. One of many jointly interviewed prospective clients cannot waive the attorney-client privilege as to all participants. In re Auclair, 961 F.2d 65 (5th Cir. 1992).

B. One of the jointly interviewed prospective clients is entitled to protection of the privilege even when joint representation proves impossible and other clients waive the privilege. Id.; see also In re Sealed Case, 29 F.3d 715, 718-19 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (remanding for a determination on the applicability of the “common interest privilege”); see generally AMRPC, Rule 1.6 & Comment (on confidentiality); TDRPC, Rule 1.05 (same).

C. Note that a joint defense agreement between defendants represented by their own attorneys may present unique ethical problems and considerations different from those presented by joint representation by a single attorney. See, e.g., United States v. Almeida, 341 F.3d 1318, 1326 (11th Cir. 2003) (holding that “when each party to a joint defense agreement is represented by his own attorney, and when communications by one co-defendant are made to the attorneys of other co-defendants, such communications do not get the benefit of the attorney-client privilege in the event that the co-defendant decides to testify on behalf of the government in exchange for a reduced sentence”); United States v. Stepney, 246 F. Supp. 2d 1069 (N.D. Cal. 2002) (discussing power of district court to inquire into and review joint defense agreements for potential ethical problems).

- V. The attorney-client privilege does not bar testimony about the original condition and location of evidence when the evidence has been removed or altered.
- A. If the attorney leaves evidence in its original location, testimony is barred by the attorney-client privilege; because removal of evidence by attorney or his client suggests an attempt to frustrate prosecution and creates an obligation to turn it over to the state, attorney-client privilege does not bar testimony on the evidence. Cluthette v. Rushen, 770 F.2d 1469, 1472-73 (9th Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1088 (1986).
- B. The attorney-client privilege does not apply when legal representation was obtained to promote continuing or intended criminal activity. United States v. Neal, 27 F.3d 1035, 1048 (5th Cir. 1994), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 1179 (1995); United States v. Soudan, 812 F.2d 920, 927 (5th Cir. 1986), cert. denied, 481 U.S. 1052 (1987); United States v. Harrelson, 754 F.2d 1153, 1167 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 474 U.S. 1034 (1985); United States v. Dyer, 722 F.2d 174, 177 (5th Cir. 1983); see also supra text, Sections II & III.

VI. Defense counsel should not advise the client what his defense “should be” before asking the client to discuss his involvement in the offense.

- A. The lawyer should seek to determine all relevant facts known to the client.
 - 1. The lawyer should probe for all legally relevant information.
 - 2. Without seeking to influence the direction of the client’s responses. ABA Standards, § 4-3.2(a), at 152.
- B. “Defense counsel should not instruct the client or intimate to the client in any way that the client should not be candid in revealing facts so as to afford defense counsel free rein to take action which would be precluded by counsel’s knowing such facts.” Id. § 4-3.2(b), at 152; see also AMRPC, Rule 1.2(d) (a lawyer shall not assist or counsel a client to engage in fraudulent conduct); TDRPC, Rule 3.04(b) (a lawyer shall not assist a witness in testifying falsely).

VII. Neither a prosecutor nor defense counsel may discourage or obstruct communications between a witness and opposing counsel.

- A. It is unprofessional conduct for a prosecutor or defense counsel to advise or cause any person (other than defense counsel’s own client) to be advised to decline to give the opposing party information which such person has the right to give. See ABA Standards, § 3-3.1(d), at 47; id. § 4-4.3(d), at 185.
- B. A lawyer shall not obstruct another party’s access to evidence or request a person other than a client to refrain from voluntarily giving relevant information to the other party. See AMRPC, Rule 3.4(a), (f); TDRPC, 3.04(a), (b) & (e); see also United States v. Arrington, 867 F.2d 122 (2d Cir. 1989) (mistrial required where there were allegations that defense attorney had attempted to keep witnesses from testifying, because rebutting allegations would require attorney to act as witness and because situation created conflict of interest); United States v. Walton, 602 F.2d 1176, 1179-80 (4th Cir. 1979); United States v. Murray, 492

F.2d 178, 194 (9th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 942 (1974); United States v. Matlock, 491 F.2d 504, 506 (6th Cir.), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 864 (1974).

- C. Prosecution can justify interference with defense counsel's right to interview potential witness only by showing the clearest and most compelling considerations. Kines v. Butterworth, 669 F.2d 6, 9 (1st Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 456 U.S. 980 (1982); see also United States v. Vega-Figueroa, 234 F.3d 744, 752 (1st Cir. 2000) (citing Kines while refusing to reverse, but stating that "[w]e take a dim view of government agents gratuitously confronting a defense witness out of court before the witness testifies"); Cacoperdo v. Demosthenes, 37 F.3d 504 (9th Cir. 1994) (even if prosecution improperly interferes with defense access to witness, there is no due process violation unless defendant can show this prevented him from eliciting favorable evidence), cert. denied, 514 U.S. 1026 (1995); United States v. Medina, 992 F.2d 573 (6th Cir. 1993) (it was not improper to wait until after witness's direct testimony to make him available to defense for interview, in context of security concerns), cert. denied, 510 U.S. 1109 (1994).
- D. When a government agent merely advises a witness of his right to decline to speak with defense counsel and the witness voluntarily declines to do so, the defendant's right of access to witnesses is not violated. United States v. Bittner, 728 F.2d 1038, 1041-42 (8th Cir. 1984); see also United States v. Davis, 154 F.3d 772, 785 (8th Cir. 1998) (no error where government merely advised the witnesses that they did not have to answer questions), cert. denied, 119 S. Ct. 1090 (1999); United States v. Tejada, 974 F.2d 210, 217 (1st Cir. 1992) (witness cannot be compelled to submit to a pretrial interview).
- E. The trial court's denial of a motion for permission to speak to a government witness during trial does not necessarily require reversal. See, e.g., United States v. Scott, 518 F.2d 261, 268 (6th Cir. 1975) (declining to reverse where: (1) trial court indicated it would grant a recess after direct testimony but the defendants never requested one; (2) defendants showed no more than the mere inaccessibility of the witness prior to trial; and (3) prosecutor related the substance of the witness's testimony to defense counsel and promised to turn over Jencks material at trial); see also United States v. Walton, 602 F.2d 1176, 1179-80 (4th Cir. 4th Cir. 1979) (expressing concern that a government witness was placed in protective custody and that defendant was not allowed access to the witness, but declining to reverse on the ground that the error was harmless since the record showed that defense counsel had reviewed a report containing the substance of the witness's testimony, was prepared to cross-examine the witness, and did a thorough job in doing so).

VIII. Criminal defense counsel is not required to advise a prospective witness concerning the possibility of self-incrimination and the witness's need for an attorney, but may not misrepresent himself to be an impartial party or burden or harass a prospective witness.

- A. It is not necessary for the lawyer or the lawyer's investigator, in interviewing a prospective witness, to caution the prospective witness about self-incrimination and the need for counsel. ABA Standards, § 4-4.3(c), at 185.
- B. However, whenever a prosecutor knows or has reason to believe that the conduct of a witness to be interviewed may be the subject of a criminal prosecution, it is proper for the prosecutor to advise the witness concerning possible self-incrimination and the possible need for counsel. ABA Standards, § 3-3.2(b), at 53; see AMRPC, Rule 3.8(c) (prosecutor shall not seek to obtain from unrepresented accused a waiver of rights); id., Rule 3.8(b) (requiring prosecutor to assure accused has been advised of his right to counsel); TDRPC, Rule 3.09(b) & (c) (prosecutor should refrain from custodial interrogation of accused unless accused has been warned of right to counsel and given reasonable opportunity to obtain counsel, and prosecutor should refrain from obtaining from unrepresented accused a waiver of important rights); United States v. Jackson, 935 F.2d 832 (7th Cir. 1991) (it is proper for prosecutor to warn unrepresented defense witness about risk of self-incrimination, in manner calculated to lead to uncoerced decision by witness); see also United States v. Johnson, 437 F.3d 665, 677 (7th Cir. 2006) (quoting Jackson).

- C. Note that the Model Rules and state rules impose upon all attorneys dealing with unrepresented third parties the obligation to make clear that they are not disinterested and the obligation not to “use means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person, or use methods of obtaining evidence that violate the legal rights of such . . . person[s].” AMRPC, Rules 4.3 & 4.4; see also AMRPC, Rule 4.1(a) (requiring that, in the course of representing a client, a lawyer shall not “knowingly make a false statement of material fact to a third party” and “shall not state or imply that the lawyer is disinterested”); TDRPC, Rules 4.03 & 4.04 (a lawyer representing a client shall not state or imply to a third party that he is disinterested and shall not engage in behavior solely to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person).
1. Engaging in deceitful subterfuge while examining a witness thus may lead to disciplinary action. See, e.g., Cincinnati Bar Ass’n v. Statzer, 800 N.E.2d 1117 (Ohio 2003) (finding that lawyer had made a statement on matters that were not supported by admissible evidence while appearing before a tribunal and that she had engaged in a subterfuge that was a deceitful tactic that intimidated the witness during the deposition of her former legal assistant by (1) conspicuously placing nine audiotapes that were suggestively labeled (but in fact contained irrelevant information) in front of the legal assistant, (2) implying that she had recorded conversations with the legal assistant that could impeach and personally embarrass her, and (3) cautioning the legal assistant to answer truthfully or risk perjuring herself).
 2. However, note that, in some cases, courts have declined to find that deceptive investigative tactics were improper. See, e.g., Office of Lawyer Regulation v. Hurley, Case No. 07 AP 478-D (Wis. Sup. Ct. Feb. 5, 2008) (Referee’s Report and Recommendation) (finding that criminal defense lawyer representing client on child pornography and sexual assault of a child charges who hired investigator who posed as a company offering a free computer and tricked the alleged child victim into swapping his current computer for a new computer to discover whether boy had pornography and child pornography on his computer and thus learned about sex other than through the defendant was justified in doing so and may in fact have been required by the Sixth Amendment to do so), available at <http://www.thedailypage.com/media/2008/02/06/WI%20OLR%20Hurley%20report%20020508.pdf>; Ryan J. Foley, State Wants Lawyer Scolded for Ruse, Wis. St. J., at A1, 2007 WLNR 5564529 (Mar. 23, 2007) (describing inception of Wisconsin disciplinary proceedings against attorney Hurley and giving concise account of the facts); see generally New York County Lawyers' Association Comm. on Prof'l Ethics, Formal Op. 737 (2007) (discussing a number of authorities on, and federal and state cases that have approved of or struggled with, an attorney's use of an investigator who engages in deceptive techniques for investigative purposes and holding that "[n]on-governmental attorneys may therefore in our view ethically supervise non-attorney investigators employing a limited amount of dissemblance in some strictly limited circumstances," as specified in the opinion), available at http://www.nycla.org/siteFiles/Publications/Publications519_0.pdf.

IX. It is neither unethical nor frivolous for criminal defense counsel to put the prosecution to its burden of proof.

- A. The Model Rules of Professional Conduct state that a "lawyer shall not bring or defend a proceeding, or assert or controvert an issue therein, unless there is a basis for doing so that is not frivolous, which includes a good faith argument for an extension, modification or reversal of existing law." AMRPC, Rule 3.1 & Comment; see also TDRPC, Rule 3.01.
- B. The Model Rules, however, make the explicit exception that "[a] lawyer for the defendant in a criminal proceeding, or for the respondent in a proceeding that could result in incarceration, may nevertheless so defend the proceeding as to require that every element of the case be established." AMRPC, Rule 3.1; see also TDRPC, Rule 3.01, Comment

C. Legal scholars have pointed out that this “exception for criminal proceedings reflects the constitutional principle that the state must prove every element of the crime charged and may not, by procedural rule or otherwise, shift its burden to the defendant.” Robert P. Schuwerk & John F. Sutton, Jr., A Guide to the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct, 27A HOUS. L. REV. 1, 236 (1990).

D. The American Bar Association has explained that defense counsel’s zealous protection of the rights of the client comports with, rather than contradicts, the administration of justice:

“Defense counsel, in protecting the rights of the defendant, may resist the wishes of the judge on some matters, and though such resistance should never lead to disrespectful behavior, defense counsel may appear unyielding and uncooperative at times. In doing so, defense counsel is not contradicting his or her duty to the administration of justice but is fulfilling a necessary and important function within the adversary system. The adversary system requires defense counsel’s presence and zealous advocacy just as it requires the presence and zealous advocacy of the prosecutor and the neutrality of the judge. Defense counsel should not be viewed as impeding the administration of justice simply because he or she challenges the prosecution, but as an indispensable part of its fulfillment.” ABA Standards, § 4-1.2, Commentary, at 122.

E. The right to counsel hinges on “[t]he very premise of our adversary system of criminal justice . . . that partisan advocacy on both sides of a case will best promote the ultimate objective that the guilty be convicted and the innocent go free.” United States v. Cronin, 466 U.S. 648, 655 (1984) (quoting Herring v. New York, 422 U.S. 853, 862 (1975)).

F. Under the Texas rules of professional ethics, for example, criminal defense counsel has no duty to correct the mistakes or mistaken impressions of the court when neither defense counsel nor the client have made any misrepresentations to the court. See TX Eth. Op. 504, 1995 WL 908214 (Tex. Prof. Eth. Comm. 1995) (concluding that, if neither criminal defense counsel nor his client have made any false statements to the court, criminal defense counsel may remain silent when the prosecutor erroneously tells the court that the client has no prior criminal convictions). But see In re Selig, 850 A.2d 477 (N.J. 2004) (holding that attorney failed to inform court of material fact and violated the rules of ethics where he told prosecutor his presence was not needed at guilty plea proceeding and merely said “you can do fines” in response to court’s inquiry when client entered guilty plea to traffic tickets when more serious charges were pending and when the guilty plea resulted in a double jeopardy bar against further prosecution on the more serious pending charges); Current Development 2005-2006, Is New Jersey’s Heightened Duty of Candor Too Much of a Good Thing?, 19 Geo. J. Legal Ethics 951 (2006) (concluding that New Jersey’s ethical rule on candor constitutes a direct attack on the adversary system).

- G. Note, however, that, if disclosure of confidential information to a tribunal is necessary to avoid a criminal or fraudulent act, then the lawyer must reveal such information. See TDRPC, Rule 1.05(f) & 3.03(a)(2); see also TX Eth. Op. 473, 1992 WL 792966 (Tex. Prof. Eth. Comm. 1992) (holding that an attorney must disclose information learned from the client showing that the client either does not now, or did not at the time of appointment, qualify financially for previously appointed criminal defense counsel); see generally AMRPC, Rule 3.3, Comment (stating that there are circumstances where failure to make disclosure is the equivalent of an affirmative misrepresentation).

- X. There is no universal answer on whether criminal defense counsel must or should disclose the whereabouts of the bail jumping client.
 - A. “No universal answers currently exist as to whether an attorney should disclose his or her fugitive client’s whereabouts. Case law and ethical opinions appear to conflict.” Shelly K. Hillyer, The Attorney-Client Privilege, Ethical Rules of Confidentiality, and Other Arguments Bearing on Disclosure of Fugitive Client’s Whereabouts, 68 TEMP. L. REV. 307, 356 (1995) ; see also Carolyn Crotty Guttilla, Note, Caught Between a Rock and a Hard Place: When Can or Should an Attorney Disclose a Client's Confidence, 32 SUFFOLK U. L. REV. 707, 721-22 (1999).

- B. Answering the issue of whether an attorney is required to disclose the whereabouts of the bail jumping client is complicated by the fact that the American Bar Association (“ABA”) has changed its position on the issue over the years.
1. In 1936, the ABA took the position that an attorney was required to disclose the whereabouts of his fugitive client and could be disciplined for failing to do so. See ABA Formal Op. 155 (1936).
 2. In 1980, the ABA took the position that an attorney did not have a duty to report to authorities that his client remained free on bond long after sentencing when the client and the attorney were not under a court order concerning surrender and when the attorney had advised the client to surrender to the proper authority. ABA Formal Op. 1453 (1980).
 3. In 1984, however, the ABA withdrew Formal Opinion 155 (1936) because it was “inconsistent with both the Model Rules of Professional Conduct and the former Model Code of Professional Responsibility.” ABA Formal Op. 84-349 (1984).
- C. Some states followed the ABA’s chameleon-like position, and some states did not do so.
1. For example, the Florida State Bar at first unanimously followed the position that an attorney was required to disclose that his client had left the state with the intention of jumping bail, Florida Ethics Op. 72-34 (1973), but it later withdrew that opinion for reconsideration. See United States v. Del Carpio-Cotrino, 733 F. Supp. 95, 98 n.8 (S.D. Fla. 1990).
 2. Ultimately, the Florida State Bar decided that a criminal defense lawyer who learns that his client has left the state for the purpose of avoiding a court appearance may not, under most circumstances, divulge such information until required to do so by the court at the time of the scheduled appearance. Florida Ethics Op. 90-1 (1990), amended (1996). The opinion notes that counsel would be ethically obliged to step forward and advise the court of the situation when, prior to the date of the court appearance, counsel knows to a reasonable certainty that the client's avoidance of the court's authority is a willful and an irreversible fact or when the client has violated some other specific condition of bond such as a condition that he not leave the state. Id.

3. The New York State Bar, however, has opined that information respecting a client's whereabouts gained in the professional relationship that the client has requested be held inviolate squarely falls within the general ethical obligation of preserving the confidentiality of client secrets and that a lawyer may postpone testifying to such information pending further review. New York Ethics Op. 528 (1981); see also New York City Bar Ass'n Comm. on Professional and Judicial Ethics, Formal O. No. 99-02 (1999) (concluding that attorney may sell property of fugitive client and pay client's creditors as long as the attorney does not know that the sale of the property or the disposition of the proceeds is unlawful).
4. Other states take a position similar to the position of the New York State Bar. See, e.g., Utah State Bar Ethics Advisory Op. Comm., Op. No. 97-02 (1997) (concluding that an attorney may not reveal the phone number of a fugitive client to authorities who have an arrest warrant for the client and that refusing to do so does not constitute assisting the client in conduct that is illegal or fraudulent); Illinois State Bar Advisory Op. 89-13 (1990) (stating that an attorney at a docket call who has a client who has disappeared or has cut off all contact cannot disclose such information if it is a secret or in confidence unless ordered to do so, in which event the attorney may disclose such information, or appeal the order, or test the law, or seek permission to withdraw from representation); Nebraska State Bar Advisory Op. 90-2

(stating that an attorney may not reveal the whereabouts of a former client to the United States Marshal where such information was received during the course of the professional relationship, but also stating that the attorney may ethically do so when the attorney determines that the client intends to commit a crime in the future, when the client has consented, or when the attorney is required to do so by law or court order).²

- D. Courts addressing the issue of whether an attorney must disclose the bail jumping client's whereabouts similarly are divided on the issue.
1. Some courts have held that the lawyer has a duty to disclose the whereabouts of the bail jumping client. In United States v. Del Carpio-Cotrina, 733 F. Supp. 95 (S.D. Fla. 1990), for example, the district court held that a lawyer has a duty to advise the court that the client has jumped bond and will not appear for trial when the lawyer has a firm factual basis (equating to proof beyond a reasonable doubt and actual knowledge) for believing such to be true. Id. at 99-100. The court did not sanction counsel for failing to inform the court and moving for a continuance because the court determined that the law on this issue had been unclear up to that point in time. Id. at 100.
 2. See also Commonwealth v. Maguigan, 511 A.2d 1327, 1337 (Pa. Sup. Ct. 1986) (holding that, when a client is under conditions of bail and defies a lawful court order to appear, "his 'whereabouts' are not unqualifiedly protected by the attorney-client privilege, and the attorney may be compelled to disclose information of the client's whereabouts"); In re Doe, 420 N.Y.S.2d 996, 998-99 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1979) (holding that attorney must disclose the whereabouts of the client who breached her plea agreement by leaving state psychiatric hospital, but relying on the later withdrawn ABA Formal Opinion 155 (1936)).

² Note that the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct state that a "lawyer may reveal confidential information . . . [w]hen the lawyer has reason to believe it is necessary to do so to comply with a court order, a Texas Disciplinary Rule of Professional Conduct, or other law. . . [or] [w]hen the lawyer has reason to believe it is necessary to do so in order to prevent the client from committing a criminal or fraudulent act." TDRPC, Rule 1.05(c)(4) & (7). Nebraska State Bar Op. 90-2 cites State Bar of Texas Informal Opinion 101 (1979) for the proposition that an attorney must comply with a court order to disclose information even when the attorney has been instructed to invoke the attorney-client privilege, but the author of this paper has not been able to confirm the existence of that Texas informal opinion.

3. Other courts have held that the client's whereabouts are protected by the attorney-client privilege. In In re Nackson, 555 A.2d 1101 (N.J. Sup. Ct. 1989), for example, the New Jersey Supreme Court held that the bail jumping client's whereabouts were privileged and not covered by the crime-fraud exception when the client had phoned the attorney from out of state in order to have him negotiate a plea agreement before he would return to New Jersey and when the authorities had used no other means to find the client than subpoenaing his lawyer to testify before the grand jury. Id. at 1103-07.
4. See also In re Grand Jury Subpoenas Served Upon Field, 408 F. Supp. 1169 (S.D.N.Y. 1976) (holding that, when grand jury subpoenas were served on the client's lawyers and the client had consulted with his lawyers concerning which jurisdiction he should relocate to from Milan, Italy, the client's address was privileged because it was communicated to the lawyers for the purpose of receiving legal advice); In re Stolar, 397 F. Supp. 520 (S.D.N.Y. 1975) (holding that client's address and telephone number were protected by the attorney-client privilege when the client had disclosed this information to get legal advice concerning the FBI's desire to question him and when the grand jury and the FBI sought the information to question the client about the whereabouts of a third person suspected of having violated federal law).

- XI. Criminal defense counsel may attempt to impeach or discredit a witness by cross-examination even when counsel knows that the witness is telling the truth.
- A. A lawyer’s belief or knowledge that the witness is telling the truth does not preclude cross-examination. ABA Standards, § 4-7.6(b), at 223.
- B. The rule above substantially applies to a prosecutor, but a “prosecutor should not use the power of cross-examination to discredit or undermine a witness if the prosecutor knows the witness is testifying truthfully.” ABA Standards, § 3-5.7(b), at 103; see also AMRPC, Rule 3.8, Comment (prosecutor has responsibility of a minister of justice and not simply that of an advocate).
- C. “If [defense counsel] can confuse a witness, even a truthful one, or make him appear at a disadvantage, unsure, or indecisive, that will be his normal course. Our interest in not convicting the innocent permits counsel to put the State to its proof, to put the State’s case in the worst possible light, regardless of what he thinks or knows to be the truth.” United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 257-58 (1967) (White, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part).
- D. “Vigorous advocacy by defense counsel may properly entail impeaching or confusing a witness, even if counsel thinks the witness is truthful, and refraining from presenting evidence even if he knows the truth.” United States v. Thoreen, 653 F.2d 1332, 1338-39 (9th Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 938 (1982). Nevertheless, an attorney was held in criminal contempt for obtaining an acquittal by having a person other than his client sit at the defense table and having a key government witness identify that person as the offender. Id. at 1340-43. According to the Ninth Circuit, defense counsel first should have notified the opposing party and the court of the substitution of the person at the defense table. Id.

XII. An attorney should not call a witness to testify if the attorney knows that the witness will claim a valid privilege not to testify.

- A. Neither the prosecutor nor defense counsel should call such a witness to testify for the purpose of impressing upon the jury the fact of the claim of the privilege, and in some instances, doing so will constitute unprofessional conduct. ABA Standards, § 3-5.7(c), at 103; id. § 4-7.6(c) at 223; cf. AMRPC, Rule 4.4 (lawyer shall not use means that have no substantial purpose other than to embarrass, delay, or burden a third person and should not use methods of obtaining evidence that violate the legal rights of such a person); TDRPC, Rule 4.04(a) (same); see also United States v. Ornelas-Rodriguez, 12 F.3d 1339 (5th Cir.) (stating that a witness's invocation of the Fifth Amendment may require a mistrial if (1) the government is flagrantly trying to build its case on inferences from the use of the privilege or (2) the witness's refusal to answer lends considerable weight to the government's case), cert. denied, 513 U.S. 830 (1994); United States v. Crawford, 707 F.2d 447 (10th Cir. 1983) (neither government nor defense may call witness knowing the witness will claim the Fifth Amendment privilege); United States v. Bowman, 636 F.2d 1003 (5th Cir. Unit A 1981) (upholding district court's refusal to allow defense to call witnesses who would take the Fifth Amendment, giving rise to questionable inferences).
- B. The trial court should carefully scrutinize the practice of calling a witness who will claim the privilege not to testify because of the potential for unfair prejudice. United States v. Maffei, 450 F.2d 928 (6th Cir. 1971), cert. denied, 406 U.S. 938 (1972); see also United States v. Vandetti, 623 F.2d 1144 (6th Cir. 1980) (suggesting use of balancing under Fed. R. Evid. 403); United States v. Kilpatrick, 477 F.2d 357 (6th Cir. 1973) (permitting prosecutor to call such a witness when government's case otherwise would be seriously prejudiced).
- C. To warrant reversal of a conviction, the prosecutor must have made a conscious and flagrant effort to construct his case on the inferences arising from the assertion of the privilege. See United States v. Brown, 12 F.3d 52, 54 (5th Cir. 1994) (vacating convictions and sentences); but see United States v. Victor, 973 F.2d 975, 979-80 (1st Cir. 1992)

(refusing to reverse due to lack of prejudice); United States v. Newton, 891 F.2d 944 (1st Cir. 1989) (prosecutor did not make conscious and flagrant effort and testimony did not add critical weight to prosecutor's case); see also Namet v. United States, 373 U.S. 179 (1963) (no reversible error where witness made only a few claims of privilege to support inference already well established by other evidence).

XIII. Defense counsel must not assist his client in testifying falsely when his client informs him that he intends to commit perjury.

- A. A defendant's constitutional right to testify does not extend to the right to testify falsely. Nix v. Whiteside, 475 U.S. 157, 173 (1986); see also United States v. Dunnigan, 507 U.S. 87 (1993) (sentence enhancement for obstruction of justice for defendant's perjury at trial did not violate defendant's right to testify).
- B. Whether a lawyer persuades or compels the client to desist from perjury, the client does not have a valid claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Nix, 475 U.S. at 175; see also Jackson v. United States, 928 F.2d 245 (8th Cir.) (it was not ineffective assistance for attorney to tell court, outside presence of jury, that defendant wanted to testify and that attorney might have to withdraw as a result; defendant's decision not to testify after court explained attorney's duties regarding perjury was voluntary), cert. denied, 502 U.S. 828 (1991).
- C. The lawyer should not inform the court in the presence of the jury that the defendant is testifying against advice of counsel, but doing so is not necessarily reversible error. United States v. Campbell, 616 F.2d 1151, 1152 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 447 U.S. 910 (1980).
- D. Courts have disagreed on whether informing the court during a bench trial or hearing that the client is testifying against the advice of counsel and will testify in narrative form, which leads the court to infer that the client will perjure himself, is ineffective assistance of counsel or the denial of the right to a fair trial. Compare Lowrey v. Cardwell, 575 F.2d 727, 730-31 (9th Cir. 1978) (holding that defense counsel at defendant's bench trial violated the defendant's right to a fair trial when counsel, who was surprised by the client's perjury, obtained a recess, unsuccessfully moved to withdraw, ended the defendant's testimony, and then did not refer to the defendant's testimony in closing argument, because counsel's actions gave the trial court the impression that the defendant had testified falsely), with People v. Andrades, 828 N.E.2d 599, 603-04 & n.3 (N.Y. 2005) (expressly rejecting the Ninth Circuit's approach in Lowery, and holding that defendant was not denied his right to a fair hearing and that counsel was not ineffective, and properly balanced his duties to the client and to the court, when counsel unsuccessfully moved to withdraw prior to defendant's suppression hearing and at the suppression hearing told the court that the defendant intended to testify, that he had advised the defendant not to testify, that he was having an ethical problem, and that he intended to just call the defendant's attention to the time, date, and location, "and let him run with the ball").

- E. At least one court has held that counsel's refusal to put his perjurious client on the witness stand did not violate his client's constitutional rights. United States v. Curtis, 742 F.2d 1070 (7th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1064 (1986).
- F. The Tenth Circuit has held that defense counsel's mid-trial, ex parte discussion with the judge concerning defense counsel's fear that his client would commit perjury did not violate counsel's ethical duty to the client or constitute ineffective assistance of counsel. United States v. Litchfield, 959 F.2d 1514 (10th Cir. 1992).
- G. Counsel should strongly discourage the defendant from taking the witness stand to testify perjurally and must not assist the client in committing perjury. See ABA Standards, § 4-7.5, at 221 (Commentary) & n.1 (noting lack of consensus on what defense counsel should do); AMRPC, Rule 1.2(d) & Comment; Id., Rule 3.3, Comment (noting also that the annotation under Rule 3.3 contains a detailed discussion of this issue); TDRPC, Rule 3.03(a)(5) & Comment 5 (a lawyer must not use evidence he knows to be false and should urge the client not to testify falsely).

- H. If persuasion does not work, counsel may seek to withdraw if necessary, but should not inform the court of the reasons for doing so. See ABA Standards, § 4-7.5 (Commentary); see also AMRPC, Rule 1.2, Comment; id., Rule 1.6, Comment; TDRPC, Rule 3.03, Comments 5&6; see also United States v. Henkel, 799 F.2d 369, 370 (7th Cir. 1986), cert. denied 479 U.S. 1101 (1987) (holding that the perjurious defendant was not denied due process or his right to counsel when the lawyer called the defendant as a witness to testify, informed the court that the defendant was testifying against advice of counsel, and moved to withdraw because he could not professionally proceed, and when the court denied the motion to withdraw and offered the defendant an opportunity to testify, but the defendant declined the court’s offer).
- I. The ABA Standards and the Model Rules appear to approve, as a last resort, disclosing the perjury to the court. See ABA Standards, § 4-7.5 (Commentary) (if withdrawal is impossible or will not remedy the situation, the advocate should make disclosure to the court); AMRPC, Rule 3.3 (Comment) (same).
- J. Some states require that, when the client commits perjury, the lawyer must take reasonable remedial measures which may include revealing the client’s perjury. See, e.g., TDRPC, Rule 3.03, Comment 12; see also id., Rule 3.03(b) (if the lawyer cannot persuade the client to correct false evidence, the lawyer shall take reasonable remedial measures which may include disclosure of the true facts).
- K. Both the Model Rules of Professional Conduct and the rules of various jurisdictions recognize the lawyer’s authority to refuse to offer testimony or other evidence that the lawyer believes is false. See AMRPC, Rule 3.3, Comment; see, e.g., TDRPC, Rule 3.03, Comment 15. As pointed out by the Texas Disciplinary Rules, for example, there is a distinction between the situation in which the lawyer knows that the client’s testimony is false and the situation in which the lawyer believes the client’s testimony is false. In the latter situation, the choice to use or not to use the testimony is within the lawyer’s discretion. “A lawyer may refuse to offer evidence that the lawyer reasonably believes is untrustworthy. That discretion should be exercised cautiously, however, in order not to impair the legitimate interests of the client. Where a client wishes to have such suspect evidence introduced, generally the lawyer should do so and allow the finder of fact to assess its probative value.” TDRPC, Rule 3.03, Comment. 15. A lawyer’s duties under the Texas Rules to remedy the prior use of false evidence “are not triggered by the introduction of testimony or other evidence that is believed by the lawyer to be false, but not known to be so.” Id.

- L. There is no universally agreed upon proper course found in the literature concerning the steps that defense counsel should take when the defendant insists on committing perjury. See United States v. Scott, 909 F.2d 488, 494 n.10 (11th Cir. 1990) (discussing various views of scholars); see also TDRPC, Rule 3.03, Comments 11& 12 (discussing three proposed solutions to dilemma of client’s perjury).
- M. A number of cases seem to approve defense counsel’s disclosure to the court of the fact that the client is about to commit perjury. See United States v. Omene, 143 F.3d 1167, 1170-72 (9th Cir. 1998) (holding that defendant was not denied effective assistance of counsel when he was put to the choice of not testifying at all or testifying only in narrative form after his trial counsel informed the court that he had an “overwhelming belief” that his client would give perjurious testimony, but could say nothing else); United States v. Hamilton, 128 F.3d 996, 1000 (6th Cir. 1997) (holding that former defense counsel did not violate the attorney-client privilege by filing a sealed pleading with the court indicating that certain receipts were false and that the client would commit perjury if he testified at trial); see also Shockley v. Kearney, Civ. A. No. 95-207-SLR, 1996 WL 431093 (D. Del. July 25, 1996) (holding that defense counsel did not render ineffective assistance when he had a mid-trial in-chambers conference with the court in which he revealed that the defendant would “testify to a version of events which I know not to be true” and when the court allowed the defendant to testify in narrative form).
- N. “Not unexpectedly, courts have adopted differing standards to determine what an attorney must ‘know’ before concluding that his client’s testimony will be perjurious.” Commonwealth v. Mitchell, 781 N.E.2d 1237, 1246, 1250-51 (Mass.) (discussing the “good cause,” “compelling support,” “knowledge beyond a reasonable doubt,” and “actual knowledge” or “firm factual basis” standards adopted by various courts and adopting the “firm basis in objective fact” standard), cert. denied, 539 U.S. 907 (2003); see also Brown v. Commonwealth, 226 S.W.3d 74, 81-85 (Ky. 2007) (adopting the approach of Mitchell).

- O. Based on the “extremely high standard for evaluating prospective perjury,” the Wisconsin Supreme Court has made it clear that “an attorney may not substitute narrative questioning for the traditional question and answer format unless counsel knows that the client intends to testify falsely. Absent the most extraordinary circumstances, such knowledge must be based on the client’s expressed admission of intent to testify untruthfully. While we recognize that the defendant’s admission need not be phrased in ‘magic words,’ it must be unambiguous and directly made to the attorney.” State v. McDowell, 681 N.W.2d 500, 514 (Wis. 2004) (holding that defense counsel was ineffective by switching to narrative questioning during trial despite the fact that he believed his client intended to testify truthfully, but finding that the client had not established prejudice); see also People v. Darrett, 769 N.Y.S.2d 14, 18-22 (N.Y. App. Div. 2003) (remanding for a new suppression hearing on the ground that defense counsel prematurely revealed, during a suppression hearing, that the client would falsely claim either self defense or alibi). But see People v. Calhoun, 351 Ill. App. 3d 1072, 1084-85 (Ill. App. Ct. 2004) (criticizing McDowell on the ground that the actual-knowledge standard “is too high,” and approving the firm-factual-basis standard of Mitchell).

XIV. Defense counsel should not comment to the jury on the possible inference of guilt from a codefendant's refusal to testify.

- A. The defendant has a constitutional right to silence, free from prejudicial comments. United States v. Kane, 887 F.2d 568, 575 (5th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 493 U.S. 1090 (1990); see also United States v. DeLuna, 308 F.2d 140, 141 (5th Cir. 1962) (reversing defendant's conviction).
- B. If counsel for codefendant comments on another defendant's decision to invoke his right to silence and such comments are not harmless, reversal is merited. United States v. Jones, 839 F.2d 1041, 1055 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1024 (1988); see also United States v. Coleman, 7 F.3d 1500 (10th Cir. 1993); Kane, 887 F.2d at 575.
- C. The test for analyzing whether counsel's comments constituted prejudicial error is:
 - 1. Were the comments constitutionally impermissible as a violation of the integrity of the defendant's right to remain silent?
 - 2. Were the comments harmless beyond a reasonable doubt? Kane, 887 F.2d at 575; see also United States v. Collins, 972 F.2d 1385, 1408 n.47 (5th Cir. 1992).
- D. A lawyer's adverse comment on the codefendant's silence is improper, but a lawyer's favorable comment on his own client's willingness to testify is permissible. United States v. LaChance, 817 F.2d 1491, 1495-96 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 928 (1987); United States v. Diecidue, 603 F.2d 535, 553 (5th Cir. 1979).

XV. Defense counsel normally should not represent two defendants charged in the same indictment or even in two separate indictments if some facts are common to each case.

- A. Defense counsel should not undertake to defend more than one defendant in a criminal case if the duty to one of the defendants may conflict with the other. ABA Standards, § 4-3.5(c).
- B. The potential for conflict of interest in representing multiple defendants is so grave that ordinarily defense counsel should decline to act for more than one of several codefendants, except in unusual situations when it is clear that no conflict will develop at any stage of the proceedings. Id.; see also AMRPC, Rule 1.7, Comment (noting that ordinarily, in a criminal case, a lawyer should represent only one client because the potential for a conflict is “so grave”); TDRPC, Rule 1.06, Comment 2 (same); see generally United States v. Infante, 404 F.3d 376, 389-393 (5th Cir. 2005) (holding that lower court erred in finding that there was no conflict of interest where trial counsel who represented the defendant also represented two of the witnesses who testified against the defendant and stated to the trial court that he would advocate for a reduction in the sentences of the witnesses based on their testimony; remanding for determination of whether the conflict adversely affected trial counsel’s performance); McFarland v. Yukins, 356 F.3d 688 (6th Cir. 2004) (affirming grant of writ of habeas corpus because trial counsel labored under a conflict of interest when he jointly represented the defendant and her daughter in a drug prosecution and made an actual choice to forego an obvious and strong defense to avoid inculcating the daughter); Dawan v. Lockhart, 31 F.3d 718 (8th Cir. 1994) (granting habeas where defendant’s attorney previously had represented codefendant who implicated defendant); Cates v. Superintendent, Indiana Youth Center, 981 F.2d 949 (7th Cir. 1992) (although joint representation of codefendants does not per se violate Sixth Amendment, counsel must advise court of conflict); United States v. Moscony, 927 F.2d 742 (3d Cir.) (attorney disqualified where attorney had interviewed client’s employees, who were under investigation but became witnesses for government, and employees at time of interview believed the attorney was representing them), cert. denied, 501 U.S. 1211 (1991). But see

United States v. Kindle, 925 F.2d 272 (8th Cir. 1991) (attorney's participation in uniform defense strategy with codefendants' attorneys does not amount to constructive joint representation or conflict of interest).

- C. The duty not to reveal information relating to representation of a client continues after the lawyer-client relationship has terminated:
1. Defense counsel, therefore, must not put himself or herself into a position where that confidentiality is threatened, ABA Standards, § 4-3.5(c) (Commentary); see also AMRPC 1.9 (discussing prohibition against representation that conflicts with the interests of a former client); TDRPC, Rule 1.09 (same).
 2. Nor may defense counsel allow confidential information to be used or revealed to the disadvantage of the former client. ABA Standards, § 4-3.5(c) (Commentary); AMRPC 1.9(c)(1) & (2); TDRPC, Rule 1.05(b)(3); see also Thomas v. Municipal Court, 878 F.2d 285 (9th Cir. 1989) (attorney could not represent husband in prosecution for assaulting wife, where attorney had formerly represented wife in action to set aside her first marriage, and husband's defense was that wife falsely accused him of assault in retaliation for his allegation that she was a bigamist); cf. Mickens v. Taylor, 535 U.S. 162 (2002) (holding that, to demonstrate a Sixth Amendment violation where the trial court failed to inquire into the potential conflict of interest arising from defense counsel's prior representation of the murder victim at the time of death and where the trial court knew of or reasonably should have known of the potential conflict, the defendant had to establish that this conflict of interest adversely affected counsel's performance); United States v. Regale, No. Crim. 01-321-KI, 2006 WL 696312, at * (D. Or. Mar. 14, 2006) (unpublished) (holding that criminal defense attorney whose client had died could not continue to serve as a resource counsel for the other defendants' attorneys with whom there was a joint defense agreement in the case due to the continued duty of defense counsel to his deceased client and the conflicts of interest that could be created by it); see generally Swidler & Berlin v. United States, 524 U.S. 399, 405-06 (1998) (discussing that the attorney-client privilege continues after the death of the client).

- D. If a lawyer would be prohibited due to a conflict of interest from engaging in particular conduct, no other lawyer while a member of or associated with that lawyer's firm may engage in that conduct. AMRPC, Rule 1.10; TDRPC, Rule 1.06(f); see In re Prince, 40 F.3d 356 (11th Cir. 1994) (rule applies to firms of any size).
- E. Although two defendants may consent to joint representation in a criminal case, the trial court may refuse to allow it. Wheat v. United States, 486 U.S. 153 (1988) (trial court may refuse to allow multiple representation when actual conflict or serious potential for conflict exists); see United States v. Vasquez, 995 F.2d 40 (5th Cir. 1993) (despite defendant's waiver of conflict, disqualification of counsel who represented a government witness was proper); United States v. Holley, 826 F.2d 331, 333 (5th Cir. 1987) (trial court's failure to comply with Fed. R. Crim. P. 44(c) requires reversal only if an actual conflict is demonstrated), cert. denied, 485 U.S. 960 (1988); United States v. Benavides, 664 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir.), cert. denied, 457 U.S. 1121 (1982) (same); see also Fed. R. Crim. P. 44(c); see generally United States v. Rico, 51 F.3d 495 (5th Cir.) (upholding waiver of conflict by wife who accepted joint representation with husband, but who later asserted this had prevented her from presenting duress defense), cert. denied, 516 U.S. 883 (1995); United States v. Reeves, 892 F.2d 1223 (5th Cir. 1990) (it was not a violation of Sixth Amendment for court to remove, over defendant's objection, counsel who was under investigation in connection with defendant's offense).

XVI. The attorney-client privilege does not prohibit defense counsel from revealing conversations with the client when the client accuses the attorney of wrongdoing.

- A. The attorney-client privilege is waived by the client when the client alleges a breach of a duty to him. See Bittaker v. Woodford, 331 F.3d 715, 716, 718 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 540 U.S. 1013 (2003); Johnson v. Alabama, 256 F.3d 1156, 1178 (11th Cir. 2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 926 (2002); Laughner v. United States, 373 F.2d 326, 327 (5th Cir. 1967); see also Indus. Clearinghouse, Inc. v. Browning Mfg. Div. of Emerson Elec. Co., 953 F.2d 1004, 1007 (5th Cir. 1992) (noting that attack on attorney waives attorney-client privilege); Doe v. A. Corp., 709 F.2d 1043, 1048-49 (5th Cir. 1983) (noting that it would be an injustice to allow client's confidence to deprive counsel of the means of defending his own rights); Tasby v. United States, 504 F.2d 332, 336 (8th Cir. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1125 (1975); see generally AMRPC, Rule 1.6(b)(2) (lawyer may reveal confidential information to the extent reasonably necessary to establish a claim or defense in a controversy with the client or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer's representation of the client); TDRPC, Rule 1.05(c)(5)-(6) & (d)(2) (same).
- B. When the client calls into question the competence of his attorney, the privilege is waived. Tasby, 504 F.2d at 336; see also Johnson, 256 F.3d at 1178; Laughner, 373 F.2d at 327.
- C. The scope of the waiver applies to all communications relevant to the issue of competence or breach of the duty. See Bittaker, 331 F.3d at 716; Laughner, 373 F.2d at 327; see also Indus. Clearinghouse, Inc., 953 F.2d at 1007 (discussing scope of waiver); cf. Naglak v. Pennsylvania State University, 133 F.R.D. 18, 23 (M.D. Pa. 1990) (waiver is limited, and blanket disclosure is not permitted); United States v. Zolp, 659 F. Supp. 692, 723-24 (D.N.J. 1987) (even a witness for the government waives the attorney-client privilege only to the extent that he discusses such confidential communications with the government); see generally Bittaker 331 F.3d at 718-729 (applying the implied waiver doctrine to restrict the scope of a habeas petitioner's waiver of the attorney-client privilege and affirming the federal district court's protective order, which precluded the state from using the habeas petitioner's privileged materials that were produced during the federal habeas proceeding for any other purpose than litigating the federal habeas petition and barred the Attorney General from turning them over to any other law enforcement or prosecutorial agencies).

- D. A lawyer may reveal such information to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to respond to allegations concerning the lawyer's competency. AMRPC, Rule 1.6(b)(3); TDRPC, Rule 1.05(c)(5) & (6), (d)(2); see also Bittaker, 331 F.3d at 718-29.
- E. The lawyer must make every effort practicable to avoid unnecessary disclosure of information relating to the representation of the client, to limit the disclosure to those having a need to know it, and to obtain protective orders or make other arrangements to minimize the risk of disclosure. AMRPC, Rule 1.6(b)(3) Comment.; Mo. RPC, Rule 4-1.6, Comment (disclosure should be no greater than the lawyer reasonably believes necessary to vindicate innocence and should be made in a manner that limits access to information by others, such as by use of protective orders or other arrangements); see also TDRPC, 1.05, Comment 14 (disclosure should be no greater than the lawyer believes necessary to the purpose).
- F. In camera review of the proposed disclosure may be an appropriate method for resolving whether the disclosure should be made. See Zola, 659 F. Supp. at 724-25; First Federal Savings and Loan v. Oppenheim, Appel, Dixon & Co., 110 F.R.D. 557, 568 (S.D.N.Y. 1986).
- G. Defense counsel should not attempt to argue his own ineffectiveness, however, but instead should seek appointment of new counsel. See United States v. Del Muro, 87 F.3d 1078 (9th Cir. 1996) (when defendant filed Rule 33 motion for new trial alleging ineffective assistance of counsel, district court erred by refusing to appoint new counsel; having trial counsel argue own ineffectiveness created conflict and was presumed prejudicial).

XVII. Counsel appointed under the Criminal Justice Act, 18 U.S.C. § 3006A, must not request or accept payment from anyone other than the court.

A. The Criminal Justice Act states that, except as authorized by the court, no person appointed as counsel by the court “may request or accept any payment or promise of payment for representing a defendant.” 18 U.S.C. § 3006(f).

B. The Seventh Circuit has cogently summarized the purpose of this provision:

The plain meaning of this sentence is that attorneys or other persons “representing” a defendant under the CJA are prohibited from seeking payment for their services from sources other than the government without approval of the district court. This provision prevents the augmentation of their CJA remuneration in any way, including the formation of side agreements with the defendant or with others. . . .

. . . This requirement ensures the protection of the government from the unnecessary expenditure of funds when other sources are available to the defendant. It also protects that defendant from demands to augment the compensation of those who have agreed to render services within the framework of the CJA. Even when, as here, the side agreement is between third parties, the possibility of eventual pressure on the defendant or on other on his behalf to reimburse that attorney for the expenditure is a substantial danger that Congress obviously intended to curb. United States v. Silva, 140 F.3d 1098, 1102-03 (7th Cir. 1998).

C. If a third party can pay an acceptable fee, counsel should inform the court that he or she is being retained to represent the client and should move the court to vacate the appointment order.

D. Note that, if counsel is appointed to represent a client in a large and complex federal criminal case, appointed counsel can apply to the district court for authorization to receive interim compensation while the case is pending. See, e.g., United States v. Gonzales, 150 F.3d 1246, 1251-52 (1998) (citing pertinent rules and noting that the district court had approved interim compensation because of the complexity and length of the proceedings).

- E. Note also that, under the Criminal Justice Act, appointed counsel cannot be paid for work done after counsel has formally withdrawn from representation of the defendant, even if the work is to aid in the transition of the case to new counsel. See United States v. Romero-Gallardo, 245 F.3d 1159, 1159-61 (10th Cir. 2001).

XVIII. The client normally is entitled to the case file held by the attorney.

- A. In a majority of jurisdictions, the client is entitled to the entire case file held by the attorney, including the attorney's work product. See Iowa Supreme Court Attorney Disciplinary Board v. Gottshalk, 729 N.W.2d 812, 819-22 (Iowa 2007) (discussing jurisdictions in the majority and the minority and adopting the majority approach that the attorney must turn over the entire file to the client); In re Sage Realty Corp. v. Proskauer Rose Goetz & Mendelsohn, 666 N.Y.S.2d 985, 987-89 (N.Y. 1997) (same); see, e.g., Hiatt v. Clark, 194 S.W.3d 324 (Ky. 2006). (holding that client was entitled to entire case file, despite attorney's claim that work product did not have to be disclosed to the client, as the client needed the file to pursue post-conviction relief); Means v. State, 103 P.3d 25, 30 (Nev. 2004) (holding that "the work product doctrine is not an exception to the inspection rights conferred in [the applicable Nevada ethics rule] and does not shield an attorney from having to disclose his notes to his former client"); see generally Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 46(2) (2000) ("On request, a lawyer must allow a client or former client to inspect and copy any document possessed by the lawyer relating to the representation, unless substantial grounds exist to refuse,").
- B. Indeed, a number of states' ethical rules and opinions specifically state that an attorney should surrender the file to the client at the end of representation or make copies of it for the client. See, e.g., Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.15(d) (“Upon termination of representation, a lawyer shall take steps to the extent reasonably practicable to protect a client’s interests, such as . . . surrendering papers and property to which the client is entitled” and “may retain papers relating to the client to the extent permitted by other law only if such retention will not prejudice the client in the subject matter of the representation.”); Annotated Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.6(d) (ABA 5th ed. 2003) (same); Pa. Bar Ass’n Comm. on Legal and Prof’l Responsibility, Formal Op. No. 2007-100, 2007 WL 1170779 (2007) (discussing client’s right to access, copy, and possess attorney’s file, and stating that “[i]t is generally accepted that client files are maintained by a lawyer for the benefit of his or her principal, the client”).

- C. Courts also have recognized that the client is entitled to the case file. See, e.g., Maxwell v. Florida, 479 U.S. 972, 976-77 & n.2 (1986) (Marshall, J., dissenting from denial of certiorari) (stating that “[t]here is no more accurate or reliable evidence of trial counsel’s actual perspective and extent of preparation than the contents of the client’s case file”); Spivey v. Zant, 683 F.2d 881, 885 (5th Cir. Unit B 1982) (holding that “work product doctrine . . . does not apply to the situation in which a client seeks access to documents or other tangible things created or amassed by his attorney during the course of the representation”); In Re George, 28 S.W.3d 511, 516 (Tex. 2000) (“The attorney is the agent of the client, and the work product created by the attorney during his representation is the property of the client.”); In re Bernstein, 707 A.2d 371, 376 (D.C. Ct. App. 1998) (“This rule unambiguously requires an attorney to surrender a client’s file upon termination of representation.”).

- D. However, a minority of jurisdictions hold that an attorney’s work product belongs to the attorney and not to the client. See Ill. State Bar Assoc., Advisory Op. No. 94-13, 1995 WL 874715, at *6 (1995) (concluding that an attorney’s work product does not belong to and need not be turned over to the client and citing in support of its position Federal Land Bank of Jackson v. Federal Intermediate Credit Bank, 127

F.R.D. 473 (S.D. Miss. 1989), affirmed, 128 F.R.D. 182 (S.D. Miss. 1989); Estate of Johnson, 538 N.Y.S. 2d 173 (1989); State Bar Association of North Dakota Opinion 93-15 (November 17, 1993); Bar Association of Nassau County, New York, Opinion No. 91-31 (November 18, 1991); Mississippi State Bar Opinion No. 144 (March 11, 1988); State Bar of Arizona Opinion No. 81-32 (November 2, 1981); and ABA Informal Opinion No. 1376 (February 18, 1977)). But see Gottshalk, 729 N.W.2d at 819-22 (Iowa 2007) (adopting the majority “entire file” position because, among other reasons, attorneys are in a fiduciary relationship with the client and owe the client candor, honest, and good faith); In re Sage Realty Corp., 666 N.Y.S.2d at 987-89 (concluding that the majority position on the issue is the better position for various reasons).

XIX. Selected legal principles and rules of professional conduct pertinent to appointment of counsel under 18 U.S.C. § 3006A.

- A. Under the Criminal Justice Act (“the CJA”), 18 U.S.C. § 3006A, the district court is required to provide representation for any person financially eligible who is charged with a felony or Class A misdemeanor, as well as other persons who are incarcerated or who face incarceration. See 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(a)(1).
- B. A person for whom counsel is appointed shall be represented at every stage of the proceedings through appeal. See 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(c).
 - 1. If at any point the court finds that the person is financially able to obtain counsel or to make partial payment for the representation, it may terminate the appointment of counsel or authorize payment, as the interests of justice may dictate. See 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(c).
 - 2. If at any stage of the proceedings, the court finds that the person is financially unable to pay retained counsel, it may appoint counsel. See 18 U.S.C. § 3006A(c).
- C. “A person is ‘financially unable to obtain counsel’ . . . if his net financial resources and income are insufficient to enable him to obtain qualified counsel.

1. In determining whether such insufficiency exists, consideration should be given to (a) the cost of providing the person and his dependents with the necessities of life, and (b) the cost of the defendant's bail bond if financial conditions are imposed, or the amount of the case [sic] deposit defendant is required to make to secure release on bond." VII Admin. Office of U.S. Courts, GUIDE TO JUDICIARY POLICIES AND PROCEDURES, Appointment and Payment of Counsel § 2.04 [hereinafter cited as "GUIDE TO JUDICIARY"].
 2. Any doubts as to a defendant's "eligibility should be resolved in his favor; erroneous determinations of eligibility may be corrected at a later time." Id.
 3. "The initial determination of eligibility should be made without regard to the financial ability of the person's family unless his family indicates willingness and financial ability to retain counsel promptly." Id. § 2.06.
 4. The court may find a defendant to be "eligible for the appointment of counsel" and have him pay available funds to the Clerk at the time of appointment or from time to time thereafter. Id. § 2.05.
- D. The district court must make an adequate inquiry into the overall personal circumstances of the defendant to make a finding concerning the necessity of appointment of counsel. United States v. Moore, 671 F.2d 139, 141 (5th Cir. 1982).
1. Even if the defendant refuses to fill out a CJA Form 23 financial affidavit because of his fear that it will be used in his prosecution, it is an abuse of the district court's discretion "not to pursue further the matter of financial need for the appointment of counsel." Id.

2. “CJA Form 23 is not a required statutory form. It is an administrative tool to assist the court in appointing counsel.” Id.
- E. However, the burden of showing by a preponderance of the evidence that counsel should be appointed rests upon the defendant, and a district court is not required to rely on a terse affidavit by the defendant when the government has come forward with evidence placing in doubt the defendant’s eligibility for appointment of counsel. United States v. Harris, 707 F.2d 653, 661 (2d Cir.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 997 (1983); see also United States v. Davis, 958 F.2d 47, 48 (4th Cir.) (“defendant bears the burden of proving that he lacks financial means to retain counsel”), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 878 (1992).
- F. In United States v. Gravatt, 868 F.2d 585 (3d Cir. 1989), the Third Circuit explained that, when a defendant refuses to fill out a CJA 23 financial affidavit for fear that it will be used against him, the district court can resolve the problem by one of two approaches:
1. the district court may afford the defendant the opportunity to disclose the required financial information for the court to review in camera, after which the financial information should be sealed and not made available for purposes of the prosecution; or
 2. if the district court deems an adversary hearing on defendant’s request for appointment of counsel to be appropriate, the court may grant use immunity to the defendant’s testimony at that hearing. Id. at 590.
 3. See also United States v. Beverly, 993 F.2d 1531, 1993 WL 165348, at *1 (1st Cir. 1993) (unpublished) (citing and discussing other courts that have adopted an approach similar to Gravatt). United States v. Davis, 958 F.2d 47, 49 n.4 (4th Cir.) (noting that district court avoided Fifth Amendment problem by examining defendant about his financial situation ex parte and sealing answers), cert. denied, 506 U.S. 878 (1992); United States v. Anderson, 567 F.2d 839, 840-41 (8th Cir. 1977) (holding that district court should have reviewed financial information in camera); cf. United States v. Ellsworth, 547 F.2d 1096, 1098 (9th Cir. 1976) (affirming denial of counsel where defendant invoked his Fifth Amendment right to silence even though the district court assured him that his financial information would not be used against him), cert. denied, 431 U.S. 931 (1977).

- G. Note that “[b]y blocking legitimate inquiry into his financial condition, a defendant implicitly waives his right to counsel.” Davis, 958 F.2d at 49; see also United States v. Owen, 407 F.3d 222, 225-26 (4th Cir. 2005) (holding that defendant waived right to counsel by failing to show that he was entitled to appointed counsel and quoting Davis).
- H. Note also that a defendant’s “false statements in an application for counsel under the [Criminal Justice] Act are subject to the penalties of perjury.” Harris, 707 F.2d at 658.
- I. In addition, although a lawyer normally should not knowingly reveal confidential information of a client, state professional ethics rules, such as Rule 1.05(b)(1)-(3) of the Texas Disciplinary Rules of Professional Conduct, list exceptions to this rule and allows a lawyer to reveal confidential information: (1) to comply with a court order, a rule of professional conduct, or other law; (2) when it is necessary to do so in order to prevent the client from committing a criminal or fraudulent act; and (3) to the extent necessary to rectify the consequences of a client’s criminal or fraudulent act in the commission of which the lawyer’s services had been used. See, e.g., TDRPC, Rule 1.05(b)(1)-(8); see also TDRPC, Rule 1.05(e) & Comment 19; cf. VII GUIDE TO JUDICIARY, supra, § 2.01C (stating that the CJA plan for each district should provide that, if counsel obtains information that the client is financially able to make payment for legal services, and the source of the information is not a privileged communication, counsel shall advise the court). In addition, a lawyer shall not knowingly make a false statement of material fact or law to a tribunal, or fail to disclose a fact to a tribunal when disclosure is necessary to avoid assisting a criminal or fraudulent act. TDRPC Rule 3.03(a)(1) & (2).

- J. Under Texas law, for example, when a client represents to a court that he is unable to afford counsel and defense counsel later discovers from the client that the client's statements to the court were false, TDRPC Rules 1.05 and 3.03 require counsel to disclose the facts to the court to avoid assisting the client in a criminal or fraudulent act. Sup. Ct. Tex. Prof'l Ethics Comm., Op. No. 473, 1992 WL 792966 (May 1992).
- K. Similarly, if the client truthfully represents to the court that he is unable to afford counsel at the beginning of the criminal case but his appointed counsel later learns during the pendency of the case that the client's financial status has changed and that he now can afford to retain counsel, TDRPC, Rules 1.05 and 3.03 require counsel to disclose the facts to the court to avoid assisting the client in a criminal or fraudulent act. Sup. Ct. Tex. Prof'l Ethics Comm., Op. No. 473, 1992 WL 792966 (May 1992).
- L. When appointed counsel learns that the client has obtained appointed counsel by a criminal or fraudulent act, counsel should remember that some state rules of professional ethics dictate that "[a] lawyer shall not continue as an advocate in a pending adjudicatory proceeding if the lawyer believes that the lawyer will be compelled to furnish testimony that will be substantially adverse to the lawyer's client, unless the client consents after full disclosure." TDRPC, Rule 3.08(b).
