Forum Ste-3rd Floor

Dan Wannamaker, Wannamaker & Associates, Austin, TX

There have been a variety of amendments to the Federal Victim Witness Protection Act. These amendments have greatly increased victim's rights in the federal sentencing process. The recent VWPA amendments mean that more and more victims will show up in court to talk during the sentencing of our clients in cases where no violence is involved. More and more prosecutions for economic crimes are defended by appointed counsel, with the defendant having long lost his or her assets prior to indictment. Appointed counsel need to: 1) be aware of these changes to the VWPA which give greater voice to victims in such cases, 2) must recognize how a "live" victim in court at the sentencing hearing can completely change the dynamic of the sentencing process, and 3) should be prepared to work on some of the strategies learned in the death penalty context for trying to communicate with and at least neutralize the impact of victims at the sentencing hearing.
